

BIOGRAPHY: Anand Anandalingam, PhD

Professor G. 'Anand' Anandalingam is the Ralph J. Tyser Professor of Management Science at the Robert H. Smith School of Business at the University of Maryland. He was Dean of Imperial College Business School at Imperial College London from August 2013 to July 2016. Previously he was Dean of the Smith School of Business at Maryland from 2007 to 2013. Before joining Smith in 2001, Anand was at the University of Pennsylvania for nearly 15 years where he was a professor in both the Penn Engineering School and the Wharton School of Business.

As Dean in two prestigious universities, Anand has raised close to $100 million in gifts for the institutions, set up a number of successful Masters degree programs, hired several very prominent senior scholars, and promoted many women and minorities to academic leadership positions, several of who have gone on to Dean positions in other universities. Anand helped establish a Center on Entrepreneurship at Imperial College, and expand entrepreneurial education and practice at the University of Maryland with a particular emphasis on social innovation. At both Maryland and London, he set up several centers of excellence including Social Value Creation, Financial Policy, Business Analytics, and Health Policy. He has also created educational partnerships around the world including in China, India, and the Middle East.

Anandalingam has also been a pioneer in online education at both the Smith School of Business at Maryland and Imperial College Business School. In the former, he launched an online MBA which is the largest revenue generator in the business school. In the latter, Anand built up an Educational Technology Unit and helped launch a very successful online blended global MBA program. Imperial College Business School also launched undergraduate business studies for non-business students from science and engineering. He created a strategic partnership with EdX to teach micro-Masters degrees in Business, Finance and Analytics.

Anand has received numerous academic and teaching awards while at the Smith School, as well as a variety of scholarships, fellowships, prizes and endowed appointments at Pennsylvania, Harvard and Cambridge. He has published more than 100 papers and 4 books, and has presented his work in numerous prestigious international conferences. His research has evolved from economic dynamics and policy, to energy and environmental systems analysis, to design and pricing of telecommunications and information systems, to technology strategy, to leadership and social entrepreneurship.

Anandalingam is on the Board of Harvard Graduate School of Arts and Sciences, Indian Institute of Management Bangalore, Zhejiang University School of Business (Hangzhou, China), American University of Cairo, and Collegiate Directions Inc. (a Washington DC non-profit supporting education for new immigrants). He has also consulted for several Fortune 1000 companies including AT&T, Nokia, MCI, Motorola, Nextel Communications, KPMG, GE Capital, and institutions such as Fujitsu NIH, The World Bank, Amtrak, US-AID, US-Department of Energy and Arnold & Porter (law firm). He was a founding partner of an energy/environmental consulting firm, International Development & Energy Associates (1982-1988).

Anand received his Ph.D. from Harvard University, and his B.A. from Cambridge University, U.K.
